DESCRIPTION

Solid wood chair with an architectural structure composed of interlocking cubic elements forming the seat, backrest and legs. The geometric design, defined by regular recesses and protrusions, gives this piece a sculptural presence and striking visual rhythm.

Made in the 1970s, this chair belongs to the brutalist movement and to the explorations of craftsmen and designers who considered wood as both a constructive and expressive medium. The balance between geometric rigor and artisanal character places it at the intersection of furniture and sculpture.
